Blydenhill, Northern Territory Blydenhill () is an outer suburb of Darwin, in the Northern Territory of Australia. Blydenhill was gazetted in 1999 and covers, much of which is flood plain and which is used for agricultural purposes. Its peak population is several thousand, but the population is very low and is decreasing. Blydenhill is located from Darwin, accessible via the Kapala and Bly Road. The suburb is split between the Rural City of Darwin and the Wulguru Springs. Blydenhill contains the northern end of the Bly Road, a major transport route running from Darwin's north-west suburbs to Palmerston. History Blydenhill is located within the traditional lands of the Wulguru (also called the Yawuru, Milminka, and Kuku Yalangi people) people. The Aboriginal population of the Blydenhill area was 30 – 50 people in the 1980s. Many moved to Katherine or Darwin following the closure of the community in 1989. The community was named after William Blyth, who discovered the Southern Daly region (now the Daly River) in 1880 1cb139a0ed
