Oh man, what I wanna do is recover a drive but I don't know much about computers. Well, this includes me. I have a seagate external drive, but I accidently destroyed that and I need to replace it. Anyway, I would first want to find out what kind of data loss (file loss, hard disk corrupt, etc.) could have happened to it. We will then find out the type of data loss it suffered and proceed from there. The steps to do so might be as follows: first, place the drive in another computer, and plug it to your primary laptop. You might need to format it in your primary laptop. If you need to repartition the drive, you are free to do so. Once in the primary laptop, open the start menu in a notepad and then go to computer, and then drive manager. In drive manager, the external drive should appear in the list of hard disks. If it does, right-click the drive and select properties. Select the "info" tab and press ok. This should open the quick format tab, where you can find out the location of the files that were lost. At the moment, I am not sure if the format is free or if there is a fee. I do not know what kind of loss, it suffered from. It seems to be a hard disk and data loss from severe power cuts might be a possibility. If so, make sure your drive is properly protected by insurance, and make sure you have the insurance policy. What the recovery should look like is this (I know it's not very clear, but I am on a computer that is not very advanced): Click the green arrow to highlight the data, then click the right button. This should bring up some sort of preview of the recovered data, and you can then click Ok. In my case, it showed a preview of the few most important files, where the computer would have lost them. For more information, you can visit: If you have more questions, let me know. EDIT: If your data is not very important, you could also use norton ghost, which will not format the drive, but repartition it, and keep a recent copy in a separate location. Once you have done so, you can then just create a new partition, and
