Oculogyre urticaria (OU) is a rare disease characterized by recurrent urticaria limited to the ocular region. We present a case of a 38-year-old woman who had an atopic dermatitis phenotype since the age of 5, who has presented since she was 15 years old with recurrent, diffuse urticaria that appeared as hives. Based on the patient's history, a diagnosis of chronic spontaneous urticaria (CSU) was formulated. She has been medicated with desloratadine 5 mg for the past 9 years. The patient has been suffering from OU since the age of 20 and has had a history of hives in the past. OU was first diagnosed when the patient was 15 years old. OU was diagnosed when the patient was 20 years old because ocular itching was not present. OU presented as a chronic evolution of symptoms. OU had initially been treated with systemic corticosteroids, but the symptoms worsened and the patient was unable to tolerate the medications. OU was successfully treated with desloratadine. This is the first case report of a patient with a CSU phenotype and OU associated with hives. The patient had a CSU phenotype, and OU began after the CSU had been diagnosed and therapy with desloratadine was initiated. This case shows that OU can occur in patients with CSU, but also that OU can occur at any age, possibly during an exacerbation of the CSU. For these reasons, in a patient with a CSU phenotype, it is important to consider OU in the differential diagnosis. We don't want to develop the application ourselves as we would be reinventing the wheel. Unfortunately, Google Docs is one of the features that are used the most. Unfortunately, Google Docs comes with a rather hard to use API. There are a bunch of issues with their API on SO. I found some more info on the Google Issue Tracker. We would prefer to use Google Docs directly, as Google does not really offer any client side option for sending data to their servers. Unfortunately, Google Docs do not have a very intuitive way to create documents. It could really use some improvement, as the documentation isn't very clear. There are some very obvious ways to solve this problem
