Many clinical studies have shown that statins decrease cardiovascular events in patients with existing cardiovascular disease. In addition to an anti-hypercholesterolemic effect, statins have pleiotropic effects including inhibition of thrombosis and atherogenesis. In randomized clinical trials, these pleiotropic effects have been shown to translate into clinically meaningful improvement in cardiovascular outcomes. Statins may also have direct effects on the heart and blood vessels, independent of their lipid-lowering properties. Finally, intensive LDL-cholesterol lowering with statins leads to a regression of atherosclerotic plaque lesions. Statins are currently first-line treatment for individuals with hypercholesterolemia, and are also used to treat established cardiovascular disease. The efficacy of statins varies according to the type and severity of cardiovascular disease and treatment is tailored according to the clinical characteristics of the patient.Doxorubicin-loaded lipid particles prepared by high-pressure homogenization: influence of lipid composition and particle size on in vitro drug release. The aim of this study was to investigate the effect of lipids on the preparation of doxorubicin (DOX)-loaded lipid particles, and to investigate the influence of particle size on the drug release of lipid particles. Lipid particles were prepared by high-pressure homogenization of solid lipid formulations containing surfactants. The formulations were composed of different solid lipids (Stearylamylidene-DL-lactide, Gelucire 50/13, Imwitor 1000, Lipoid E80 or Imwitor 1300) and surfactants (Lutrol F68, Cremophor EL or Solutol HS 15). The highest encapsulation efficiency and greatest particle size was obtained with the Imwitor 1000 lipid formulation. The formulations composed edd6d56e20
