Typical examples of serious illnesses include a spinal cord injury, a cerebral palsy, a multiple sclerosis, a spinal cord tumor, a spina bifida, a muscular dystrophy and the like. Such a gait trainer is used for the purpose of training a patient's walking ability in a rehabilitation treatment by providing the patient with a service for simultaneously developing the central nervous system (CNS) and the musculoskeletal system. In recent years, numerous studies have been conducted on the mechanisms of walking as well as the optimization of gait systems (see Patent Literature 1 and Patent Literature 2). Because each of the musculoskeletal system and the CNS controls the movement of a human body via the nerves, their interaction is the basic factor of walking. In particular, when using the gait trainer, the exoskeleton, which is an embodiment of the gait trainer, is controlled so that the joint positions and the joint angles at the time of standing up and sitting down and the joint positions and the joint angles at the time of walking follow the joint positions and the joint angles that control the human walking. Specifically, as shown in FIG. 16, by providing a light stimulation electric field (an electric field in the light range) on the bottom face of the sole of a shoe 2, it is possible to activate the nerves associated with the foot and the spinal cord, which control the walking. When the foot is stimulated, the length of the lower limb increases, and the angle of the pelvis and the trunk changes. When the pelvis and the trunk change, the angles of the hip joints and the knee joints also change. By performing this control, the electric field is provided on the sole of the shoe 2, and the joint positions and the joint angles of the human body are moved so as to correspond to the foot posture of the patient walking on the treadmill by the joint positions and the joint angles at the time of standing up and sitting down, and the joint positions and the joint angles at the time of walking. In such a gait trainer, when the 3da54e8ca3
