In a new study, researchers found that the presence of a cat in a room not only added 17 minutes to the average length of time that people spent drinking, but also reduced the amount they consumed by 16 percent. People spent an average time of 40 minutes drinking in that room; they had added time (about 20 minutes), but also drank less (16 percent less). Here's the study: The results suggest that people are becoming more careful drinkers when there is a cat around, and that cat owners, particularly, are conscientious when it comes to alcohol, says Dr. Michael Holbrook, lead author of the study and a senior research officer at the University of London's Institute of Psychiatry. Previous research has demonstrated that the presence of cats reduces alcohol use among people who already drink heavily, but less is known about their impact on people who do not have a drinking problem, he says. In the current study, researchers randomized adult participants to drink at a pub in which a cat was present or in which the cat was absent. Researchers recorded when each drinker finished the glass of wine or beer and, the following morning, how many drinks they consumed. The average person drank 47.4 percent more alcohol in the cat-present than in the cat-absent room. Cat owners, however, not only drank fewer drinks, they drank less alcohol than non
