The US Air Force awarded contracts for four new F-16 fighter planes on Monday, and the first two flights in the new F-35 Lightning II are scheduled for next year. The Air Force earlier this month issued a request for proposals for four of a total 48 F-16s that the US military intends to buy for an estimated cost of $45 billion. The first contract award and first combat missions with the F-35 are scheduled for next year. The deals are expected to involve more than 2,200 suppliers to the Pentagon, the US Army, US Navy and the Air Force, and will extend over 15 years. The four-aircraft deal will include the first production model of the F-35, according to a statement from Lockheed Martin Corporation. The US firm and Pratt & Whitney are providing the engines for the F-35A, as well as its F-35B and F-35C variants. The deals also involve the first production deliveries of F-35 landing gear and other components. The F-35 is a multi-role stealth fighter jet designed to defend airspace and enforce US air sovereignty. It is designed to take off and land on runways, fly close to enemy air defenses, and employ a high number of high-tech weapons. Manufactured under the US Military's Joint Strike Fighter program, the F-35 was the Pentagon's costliest weapons program, and is one of the most expensive weapons in history.
