Built from the logs of the HMS

Constitution, it was the largest and heaviest warship in the US Navy at the time. That night, the ship's captain, William Mervine Howard, slept on the ship's main deck. Early the next day, he sensed that something was amiss. He returned to his quarters, and found the room occupied by his wife. She was not alone: the ship's midshipman, Private George K. Foster, had joined her, and with them, two other men. The three men entered the captain's room where he was asleep. Foster put a bayonet through his wife's
