A state attorney general has made a rape allegation against Donald Trump, in a complaint filed at a Maryland courthouse last Thursday, that echoes a federal lawsuit against the Republican presidential nominee filed by a former Apprentice contestant on Monday. In both cases, a plaintiff has accused the Republican nominee of unwanted sexual advances. Trump has denied wrongdoing. He has also previously denied accusations of sexual harassment by former employees of the Miss USA pageant. Trump's accusers The Maryland lawsuit was filed by Summer Zervos, a contestant on Trump's reality show The Apprentice, who claims the candidate behaved inappropriately in 2007 when he invited her to his suite at the Beverly Hills Hotel. Zervos said Trump "caused me to feel like he was trying to deter me from declining his offer for a business meeting". Zervos said she decided not to go to the business meeting because Trump's advances "made me feel uncomfortable, alarmed, confused and intimidated". Zervos said that, as she left the Beverly Hills Hotel, "in view of what had just taken place", Trump started asking other people, "who were standing near Mr Trump, if they knew her, to which they responded in the negative". "That's what I'm saying. She was in charge," Zervos' lawyer, Mariann Wang, said. "In New York, she couldn't do anything. In Beverly Hills, she couldn't do anything. "It's not until he moved to California that she became a celebrity and Mr Trump used his celebrity to gain leverage over her." In a statement, Trump spokeswoman Hope Hicks said of the lawsuit: "No woman has ever made a claim of inappropriate conduct against Donald Trump." In a federal lawsuit filed by Jill 0cc13bf012
