1. Field of the Invention This invention relates to the field of orthodontic practice and more particularly to a device for providing a uniform loading pattern to orthodontic wires having different lengths and diameters. 2. Description of the Related Art Orthodontic treatment involves repositioning misaligned teeth and improving bite function. Repositioning is accomplished by applying gentle controlled forces to one or more teeth over an extended period of time. This is conventionally accomplished by wearing a set of resilient archwires and affixing them to the bracket of a tooth using either elastic bands or ligature wires. The force exerted by the archwire against the tooth movement is determined by the wire, its method of affixation to the bracket as well as the bending method of each archwire, the stiffness of each archwire, and the patient's individual tooth anatomy. Orthodontic archwires are fabricated in standard lengths with a variety of diameters to allow the dentist to select the most suitable archwire for a given case. A typical example of archwires for the treatment of a patient can be found in U.S. Pat. No. 5,054,459, the disclosure of which is incorporated herein by reference. The use of an appliance such as a fixed edgewise appliance, a removable edgewise appliance, a full arched appliance, or an appliance which is a combination of the two is common in orthodontics. Orthodontic treatment is a long process during which corrective measures have to be frequently taken. For example, when a removable appliance has to be removed and then replaced, careful matching of the wire to the bracket ligation is required. Additionally, when the patient requires a relapse after treatment with braces has been completed, the archwires are again replaced as an interim step in the treatment regimen. Therefore, it is important that the orthodontist be able to easily verify the appropriate length and diameter of archwire for each tooth. Several devices have been proposed for checking the length of the archwire. One approach is to use a specific device which is attached to the bracket of the treated tooth. Another approach is to use a metal ruler which is calibrated in millimeters and which is calibrated to allow a user to see if the wire is too long. U.S. Pat. No. 4,226,538, the disclosure of which is incorporated herein by reference, discloses such a ruler. U.S.

Tag: sapphire This post is about Irrefutable. It is about a word for many of us, but that's okay. It is about me and you and my challenge to you. I want you to see me and know I can be not just a mother, but also a wife, a daughter, and a friend. I am a woman who is not my own. I am here because of other's. I am writing this post for those of you who have asked to read more about me. It's only fair. There has been so much about me and no one else is willing to share about themselves. It's the way it goes sometimes. This post isn't about me. I'm a little girl in a blog. This is about the depth and breadth of my relationship with God. It has been almost two years that God has shared Himself with me. This is the first time that I have actually told of the depth and breadth of this relationship. Not like it's something I should be proud of or boast about. I'm human and all those things that I go through as a human are part of the totality of who I am. It's the way it's supposed to be. As a human being, I'm expected to do things and experience things. But this stuff with God? This relationship that God shares with me is different. It's a gift. It can be found in any book, God says. It can be found with any need of any human being. Any book and in any preacher and even in any mentor. I can find it even in my father's living room, in the corner of my father's garage, at the local park, or in any restaurant we choose to visit. God. He came to me. He entered into my life. He took my sin for the purpose of me being sanctified. He bore witness of His identity and that He and I are brothers and sisters. He changed me and I am no longer the same person I was before I met Him. He has altered me and made me whole again and the process continues. He showed me that He has a destiny for each of us and that I have a part to play in His plan. He is fulfilling His plans and we are a part of it. We have been given a purpose and a place
