.. To learn more about why Nazareth College is the ideal .Communicating with fish by David (Ohio USA) I have an African cichlid and a Starfish. They have been together for five years. I am looking for information on how to talk to the fish. I have been reading articles on the internet and none has really given me a clue. I have tried mirror gazing (just stared into a glass of water) but they always look at my feet. They are very elusive. Their behavior changes from day to day. It was doing the same thing last summer - it was like a "Goldfish." My best guess is that some of the behavior is territorial. I have read that it is bad to call them all the time. I started calling them little fishies and they did better. The Starfish doesn't really care what I call her, but the African Cichlid is very sensitive. Here is what I have found so far. I have tried scratching them under the water, but they are not that sensitive. Then a friend recommended that I try calling them a few times. I have been calling them for awhile, to no avail. I do call them when they are lying in the substrate of my tank (suds) or when the water is quiet. It takes a while before they come to me. Then they "call" me a few times before they settle down. I am at a loss for suggestions. Would love to get some feedback. I really want them to be less elusive. Comments for Communicating with fish Hello petersonm, Well your questions are a bit broad for one answer but I am going to give a general response. Your cichlid is an African Otocinclus. The African Otocinclus is one of the most difficult cichlids to care for. They have a strong will which makes it difficult to communicate with them. They are bottom feeders which means they are slow and perhaps harder to communicate with. The African Cichlid is a beautiful fish and they have a variety of colors but that often do not include black and silver. They have a strong personality and it is good to remember that when you try communicating with them. If you would like, there are a variety of fish books out there that address the care of cichlids. One of the best is called "Aquarium Behaviour" or are about to start a new project and we don't have much experience in unit testing. I can't find a clear example how to write a unit test for an existing project if there's no existing test structure. Is there a standard way in angularjs to run the test/spec flow against the "real" code instead of a mocked object (which is the approach I usually use)? This is the important part: We don't have the time to fix up all our files and write custom mocks and want to avoid a lot of unnecessary time. We've been using bower, grunt and Karma/Protractor for integration tests.

A: There is always a way to do it. But I hate to say this, it may sound harsh, but if you don't have the skills in writing tests, then you better do as many people do in real-world, i.e. just don't write any tests. The problem with new projects with relatively small code base, is that there will probably not be much to test. And even when there is code, some people will just not bother to write tests. Why would you want to do that? How important is it to you? Another thing that works is to start writing tests from the beginning. That is, if you start your project, write a simple suite of unit tests. Write them to be as fast and simple as possible. Then you can refine them as the project evolves. But if you start with a complex application (say a complex angular app)

you will be doomed.
Writing unit tests against an already messy application will be very painful indeed. I am a big fan

Cohomology of the group  $\mathbb{R}^2$  with group structure  $\mathbb{Z}^2$  I got the following question and I'm not really sure where to begin. Let  $G = \mathbb{R}^2$  with the group structure inherited by  $\mathbb{Z}^2$  on  $\mathbb{R}^2$ .

a.) Let  $H^0(G, kG) = k$  be the trivial  $k$ -representation of the trivial group  $G = \mathbb{R}^2$  b.) Let  $H^1(G, kG) = k \oplus kx$  for  $x \in G \setminus \{0\}$ c.) Let  $H^n(G, kG) = 0$  for all  $n \geq 2$  I'm quite unsure of how to actually prove c.), however I have seen in a textbook a proof of the fact that every abelian group has the trivial  $n$ th cohomology, so it should be easy. A: (c.) is known as the Universal Coefficient Theorem, and is true in general. ]

Compared to CMR, the echocardiographic technique can be quickly obtained and is more accessible for the patients.

However, the use of echocardiographic techniques is associated with some disadvantages. For instance, the LA volume assessed by echocardiography is usually overestimated compared to that by CMR [[@CR22]]. Both CMR and echocardiographic methods are affected by the level of atrial contraction. As such, the LA and LV volumes could be underestimated as the atria are in a relaxed state during the acquisition of echocardiographic images. This might
