* Mac OS X: * Windows: In this book, _Photoshop CS6 Extended_ is used as the base version. Updates are provided when the edition is later than that used in the book. ## What Is a Digital Camera? Digital cameras create images by capturing light from an object, converting the light into an electronic signal, and processing and storing that signal. When you look at a photo taken with a digital camera, you see the photograph in its digital form. The light that is captured is converted to an electronic signal, and the signal is processed and stored. Digital cameras enable you to make creative changes to the image by changing the underlying image information that is captured. This book uses a digital camera to create images and then demonstrates how to work with those images. You create your own images using the camera in various creative ways. ## About This Book The chapters in this book are designed for ease of reading and reference. The information presented in each chapter is self-contained and can stand alone if the chapter is the only reading material you need for that subject. Each chapter has useful appendices that contain information to help you get to the information in the chapter. These are not required reading but do provide additional information that you may find useful. ## Using the CD-ROM/DVD-ROM The disk that is provided with this book, named _Photoshop CS6 Extended_, is a secure online resource that contains additional content. Go to to get the digital version of the book. ## Book Summary This book describes the features, tools, and techniques you need to create images. In addition to new tools and features, this book also covers the new features for your editing environment as well as how to access and store images on different types of media. This book is designed to guide you through the various techniques you need to create and manipulate images. It provides tutorials that are meant to demonstrate the process in an easy-to-follow format. ## The Book This book is divided into nine parts. Each part describes the tools and techniques that are included with Photoshop CS6 Extended.

I love a good moustache and, though I generally like facial hair, I can't stand uncut beards. I've written this article without personal experience because the overwhelming majority of men I know with facial hair are either unshaven scruffs or successful fruit farmers. That doesn't mean I don't have a preference, however. My preference is medium length, slightly darkened, and cut across the face with about 4 millimetres left of stubble. The men you see in my photographs usually have that, but the more adventurous among you may be thinking about trying out a beard for the first time. If you're planning to grow a beard, you'll need to prepare your facial hair for growth. And the first thing you need to do is strip off the hairs. Start by picking them off with your fingers or a pair of clippers. But doing so may leave your face a bit red and irritated so be aware of the area you're removing. What about after? If you're growing a beard you'll need to prepare your skin for growth. You may require exfoliation, sun protection, moisturisers, and of course, shaving. In the next article, we'll take a closer look at what you need to shave your beard and where to get it from. Beauty, is in the eye of the beholder. It doesn't matter whether you are a beard lover, or have never grown a beard. It is a personal choice! It is a personal feeling, a personal comfort zone. Whether you have a beard or not it is a personal choice. you have a face shaped like this. There is not one 'perfect' face. If it is the choice of the individual, make it your decision. What's New In?

Here's to the Builder This is the first in a series of posts. These posts are about my experience as a builder, but a story for every one of you. Today I'm going to write about the first build I remember. Since I'm a young boy I don't remember a lot about my childhood. I'm still trying to put together what happened back then and since everyone has a different childhood I figured I might be able to write down a few thoughts and memories about the very first house I remember. This is about my childhood that I can share. My earliest memory was that of moving into my first house at the age of 6. That's right. The first house I remember was my childhood home. My parents decided to buy a 4 bedroom house at the age of 30. I grew up in a house with three bedrooms and one bathroom, a full kitchen and living room. We had a beautiful garden, a driveway and a backyard with two trees. I grew up in California, with both my parents, 2 older sisters and a brother. We have a pure American childhood and we were full of energy and enthusiasm. We had fun and we lived for no reason. When I look back at my childhood I remember two things. My mother and my father. They were the most responsible people I have ever met. They were also very loving and calm. They always told me that I need to trust my instincts. That I have a sixth sense, that I listen with my heart and that I'm able to recognize the good in people. I mean what a gift to have parents that trust you and believe in you when you're not even old enough to talk. My parents also taught me that no one is perfect. You don't need to be worried about making mistakes. The most important thing is that we do what we believe in. We made a decision to buy a house when I was 6 and we sold our old house while I was still in kindergarten. I remember little of the process, but I do remember some of the details. I remember sitting in a car with a real estate agent and my father. I remember my two sisters were telling me to be a good boy and to keep quiet. I remember two tears rolling down my cheeks. I remember our
