A composite view of the epidemiology, pathophysiology and treatment of chronic constipation. Chronic constipation is a common disease with a poor response to conventional medical treatment. A significant percentage of affected patients are unsatisfied with their present management. Various conditions have been proposed in the pathogenesis of chronic constipation, namely, impaired anal sphincter tone, neuropathic, myopathic and psychogenic factors. The differences among these factors are the severity of constipation, the component of the colon involved and the response to treatments. The evidence for these pathophysiological theories of chronic constipation are discussed, particularly with regard to data on chronic constipation following spinal cord injury. A number of different treatments for chronic constipation have been reported. Firstly, increasing fiber supplementation has been advocated, and secondly, more pharmacological approaches, including the administration of laxatives and the use of elemental minerals such as psyllium. More recently, the use of specific biofeedback and microclimate therapy have been attempted to improve the functional capacity of the bowel. This article provides a comprehensive overview of the different theories of pathophysiology underlying chronic constipation, and presents the most recent evidence that supports the use of biofeedback therapy.Q: Draw border for each row of WPF DataGrid I have a WPF DataGrid c9d1549cdd

Cancer development may be associated with the expression of genes and proteins involved in signal transduction pathways. The present study aimed to investigate whether the expression of signal transduction pathways related to cell proliferation and apoptosis is altered in endometrial cancer cell lines. The expression of members of the ErbB family, Shc, and Crk, which are involved in signal transduction pathways from proliferation to apoptosis, was assessed by RT-PCR and western blotting. Expression of growth-related proteins such as p53, Cyclin D1, and c-myc was assessed by RT-PCR. Expression of apoptosis-related proteins such as Bax and bcl-2 was assessed by immunocytochemistry. Expression of ERK and JNK was also investigated. Of the three cell lines tested, Ishikawa and HEC-1B expressed Bax and Bcl-2, while AN3CA expressed both Bax and Bcl-2. In addition, bcl-2 expression was highly positive in the cytoplasm of the AN3CA cells. p53 expression was detected in all cell lines, but not in HEC-1B and AN3CA. Expression of Cyclin D1 and c-myc was weakly expressed in AN3CA cells. In comparison with normal endometrial tissue, Ishikawa cells showed high expression of ErbB-2, c-myc, and cyclin D1. In addition, Ishikawa cells expressed low expression of Shc, ER
