Fish Story: Gourmet Puzzle is a puzzle video game developed by Namco-Bandai Games and distributed by Namco for the Game Boy Color handheld video game console. It was released on September 18, 2000 in Japan, July 6, 2001 in North America and October 26, 2001 in Europe for the Nintendo 64. Plot The Gameworld, a world populated by humans, fish, sea creatures, dinosaurs, robots, and aliens, is plagued by the "Unicorn Crisis". Unicorns are the game's equivalent to chaos pirates, since unicorns are one step away from becoming a terrifying spirit that will either capture a player's soul and use it to physically control his body, or kill him outright, depending on which one is the AI version. If a unicorn is conquered, both the player's soul and the unicorn's soul are forcefully converted into one by the Chaos Emperor and chained to the gameworld's undersea temple, thus causing destruction to the mankind's underwater city. Before the player begins the adventure, he is briefly guided through the events which led the creation of the Unicorn Crisis by an old unicorn who personally past on to the Chaos Emperor. Gameplay In Gourmet Puzzle, the player controls a "Chrono-Lancer" who is described as "a race of fish with organic legs, in reality the latter are the actual trapezes, granting the Chrono-Lancer the jumping ability of his namesake." The protagonist of the game, Charan, is a fish who, due to his inability to consume people, can only attend to the world as an observer. The Chrono-Lancer can traverse the 3D environments by fishing on tramps all over the ocean, thereby gaining items and power ups (more about that later). Initial objections are made when the traveler is introduced to the "G-Meters," the game's equivalent to Time Accelerators, most notable of which is its passing after every daily log-out, and locked-in-after-log-out tabula rasa "Museum Mode". The museum, full of 1000 pictures of past players, is later made unavailable if the player ventures away from the range of the world's "Chrono-Radio," and also serves as the lab for the coming battle against the Chaos Emperor, which unlocks a fourth main play area, called "The Volcano Frontier." The game time runs on a real-time system and thus is affected by many factors: seasons,
