I would like to do a poll (or other wait) for a given number of seconds. The problem is that just calling poll() blocks, so my application just blocks forever if the number of seconds is longer than the timeout. Is there a way to do this without blocking the whole application? I can't use a thread as this would just be a good way to block. I thought I could use a thread pool so that I could increase the number of threads (either by using a thread pool from another framework or by using the.NET one). But that is still blocking because the thread pool is working hard on other stuff, too (like long threads). Is there any other way to do this? I can't use select() either, as I'm working on a very embedded system that doesn't have one. A: You can do this by using a timer. int timedPoll(int totalTimeout) { int numThreads = 4; Timer timer = new Timer(); timer.Interval = 1000; //re-check every 1 second //Create threads for (int i = 0; i 1) { timer.Stop(); return timer.ElapsedMilliseconds / numThreads;

I have no idea how to do this. I attempted to use the following code, but this does not work. if($(window).height() > 300) { //do something } This works, but the scrollbar is not grey (it doesn't appear as it should). alert($('body').height() + 'is' + $(window).height() + 'px'); if($(window).height() > 300){ alert("Test."); } This code doesn't work, but I'm not sure why. My scrollbar is grey, but doesn't appear on the page. alert($('body').height() + 'is' + $(window).scrollTop() + 'px'); if($(window).scrollTop() > 0 && $(window).height() > 300){
