He's arguably the most underrated basketball player of all time, especially considering the hell he's been through the past few years, starting at 25 and playing a million games in five years, when he can still be a 27-year-old rookie. He's been just that good this year, averaging a double-double (21.5 points and 8.9 rebounds) and dishing out 6.7 assists per game, while ranking 10th in the league in scoring and fifth in rebounding. He's also earned an all-star spot this season. People thought Gordon was the league MVP because he'd won the triple-double in the playoffs, and KD was the clear-cut ROY in a year where it was far from easy to make the case for anyone other than Chris Paul. And they thought Nash was the best point guard ever. But no one can deny that DeRozan is an excellent player and that he's a force to be reckoned with. And if the Clippers are going to have any chance of dethroning the Clippers, he'll need to keep up his fantastic play. How he gets the nod from the "

Q: How does Apple's iMessage actually work? I am very curious to see how Apple's iMessage actually works. I have tried to find out some things but didn't find them. Are all conversations end-to-end encrypted? Are messages sent to the Apple servers, or do you have direct access to the servers of iMessage? Is there any possibility to delete messages? Do you receive messages from people that are not on your contacts list? Do you receive any messages to people that are not on your contacts list? By the way: I would be happy to see a video with explaining the process of iMessage from an end-user point of view (by somebody who didn't understand the concept of end-to-end encryption).
