I am creating a method that determines whether a view is affected by a transaction or not. The view may be stored on a local database or accessible over the network, but does not need to be attached to the actual database session. For this I need a method that can be called with a generic name: public static boolean isViewAffectedByTransaction(View view) but it will be important to know if it is stored on the local database, if it is stored on a remote database, or it is loaded from the internet. I am using Spring and Hibernate as ORM tools. A: You can make a generic method which receives a GenericType parameter and use the method Type.isAssignableFrom to check for a particular implementation of the generic type. private static boolean isViewAffectedByTransaction(Class viewType) { return (T) viewType.isAssignableFrom(viewType); } Q: How to get a list of folder whose name contains a certain string? I'm new to PySide, and I have a list of folders whose names are "Animal 1", "Animal 2", "Animal 3", etc. I want to get the names of folders whose names contain the string "Animal". How can I do that? Edit: Seems like I need an external Python module. See this thread: pyside directory scan for matching file A: You can use the glob module for this. See the example below. For example the following will find a folder whose name contains the string "Animal": import glob print(glob.glob("Animal*")) You can check the result using the dir function: import glob import os print(os.listdir("Animal")) Alternatively you could use the 6d1f23a050
