There is one specific type of field, like NameFieldType, that has a corresponding Attribute called NameFieldTypeAttribute. I need to set a default value for this Attribute for all NameFieldTypes. I don't want to change the NameFieldType attribute for each NameFieldType because there is too much to go through manually. Is there a way to set a default value for that NameFieldTypeAttribute once for all NameFieldType? A: In your code you can do this for NameFieldTypeAttribute: #@Attribute class NameFieldTypeAttribute def initialize(record) # the following is not used # record.attributes[:name_field_type _attribute] ||= {} end def name_field_type super end end # create an attribute for name field type Record.send(:attribute_alias_method, :name_field_type_attribute, :name_field_type) Q: XSLT template Matching all child elements, then providing child key value of selected element I am trying to create a recursive template structure for XPath expression that will match child elements within the parent element and then find the child node of that element having a specific value. For example, I have an XML element that contains XML elements and I want to create an XSLT template that when passed the value 'hello' matches every child element and then passes the key value of the top-most element to the next template. My problem right now is the output doesn't contain any child elements. Here is the XML element:
