some states, like california and massachusetts, have legislated to create liability for construction defects if construction is completed before code is in place. but in most places, like new york, if a building is not constructed according to the codes, it is not subject to the state s building codes. other states, including iowa, washington and texas, require that developers pay for their own assessments to determine whether to cover injuries. but new york s legislature, dominated by property owners, has refused to create such a fund. in 2011, after 35 years of fighting the contaminated community, new york paid its highest amount of the us clean water act, $254 million to compensate more than 8,000 residents and 1,000 property owners for the impact of toxic contamination on their properties, a report said. the state air resources board has set a goal to protect the city from severe air pollution, but a state supreme court decision in 2014 cast doubt on its legal right to do so. the court ruled that the state department of health, which regulates air pollution, had no authority to enforce a 2005 agreement among five of the citys most powerful business leaders to improve air quality. executives and some business owners who agreed to address air pollution in 2005 were not personally liable for the pollution, which causes respiratory and cardiovascular problems, among other problems, according to the new york times. the air pollution is the result of motor vehicle emissions and industrial plants. according to the world health organization, more than 180,000 people die prematurely every year due to poor air quality.
