You can knit your own of your familys heirloom Tartan, be they antique or modern, but they will last for a long time. This is designed to be suitable for a range of yarn types from every-day DK to worsted to 4ply and Sock weight yarns, as well as most yarns used for worsted weight continental scarves, throws, and afghans. The large size is perfect for a baby or baby sweater. Crochet or knit the girdle, then assemble the pieces. The girdle can then be sewn to the front/back. There are 8 large and 9 small pieces, making this a great project.I started the girdle with a solid colour, but you can make it entirely in the Tartan yarn, or mix and match. Just remember, both knitting and crocheting the girdle, you will need to use only one of the colours from the girdle as you stitch your hat to the girdle. The front of the hat is made of the Tartan yarn and the back of the hat is the solid colour, leaving you enough yarn for the girdle. I chose blue for the colours, but you can make the girdle in any colours of your choice. I call it the GEORETARIAN because it was inspired by two similar designs, found on separate websites at the same time. I used the Tartan, in large stone grey, as the base for both the designs. One has a real spiral diamond pattern, like on a royal/aristocratic Tartan, and the other was inspired by the Moravian Crystal Leaves, used in the Moravian region in Czech Republic, where at the annual Lambasting Ceremony, Moravian men and women hold crystals as they march in order to celebrate the end of winter. The motifs are identical, so I combined them. The larger of the two motifs is the Georgian and the smaller the Moravian Crystal Leaves. The three motifs are done using three stitches: two and one. This is a typical 'georgian' or 'Moravian-Czech' technique. You can use other knitting patterns, if you prefer. Note that the pattern is written in US terminology, so please follow the gauge given for your yarn. I used the same weight of yarn for a worsted weight hat, so you should have enough to knit this pattern. 5ec8ef588b
