India Today, India is One!Dubai: The average monthly salary of UAE expatriates is Dh21,364 a month, as per the report released by Emirates Authority for Standardization and Metrology (ESMA), the statistics for May 2017 revealed. The Emirates Gazette, the UAE's official newspaper, has reported that the salary for expatriates is at Dh21,364, a figure that is significantly lower than the average national salary of Dh57,689. The report covers the data for May 2017 and the actual national average salary is expected to be higher than the figure as the country's gross domestic product rose by 4.8 per cent last year, with some emirates recording a 10 per cent growth. "In the UAE, the domestic market controls the biggest proportion of the market. The majority of companies are closed to foreigners. Besides, the cost of living is also considerably higher," said Al Alali, managing director at Emirates Ecommerce and Payments, a company that provides payment, cash and electronic solutions. However, there are companies that are open to expatriates, and the National Statistics Bureau reported that the number of expatriates working in the UAE increased by 24,000 to reach 628,000 in the past year. Emirates Ecommerce and Payments reported that the number of expatriates in the UAE increased by 4.5 per cent and is expected to hit 1.15 million by 2020. "Even if there are policies that prevent companies from hiring locals, there are a significant number of companies that have a policy of hiring expatriates. For instance, banks need to hire expatriates in order to prevent money laundering," Al Alali added. Despite the higher cost of living, there are still companies offering attractive salaries for expatriates, with prices for certain goods and services decreasing over the past three years. The food and beverage sector

Price Android.Q: Where to find question on how to identify that a resistor is high power I have two high power resistors (5W, I believe) from an HPLC (liquid chromatography) machine which I've been asked to replace. HPLC resistors are not listed in the HV-component list of the Vishay web site, only the ones which can handle up to 700V, and the new ones I'm told to get don't have a higher rating (even on the Vishay web site). I'm fairly sure that the reason they have to be replaced is that the new ones are designed to handle more than 5W at that voltage, and I'm wondering how to figure out which resistor is which. The whole reason I'm confused is that a) I'm not an EE, so the actual theory behind this is totally outside my field of expertise, and b) I've only ever dealt with low power DC stuff, like 12V, 24V, and 60V in my life so I'm not even sure where to look. In fact, even looking up "how to find a resistor that can handle 100W or 5W" gives me very little confidence that I've got the right one. I'm basically looking for a place to read something about how to figure this out, whether that's some book, some web page, a website that specializes in high-voltage parts, or something else entirely. A: The heat-sink rating of a component like a resistor is a significant indication. If it's rated for 50 Watts (7.5 Amps) and you're applying 100 Watts (150 Amps) across it, you're guaranteed a fairly large wattage rise in the resistor. The rating for that material will be stated in Watts per Ampere (W/A) so for example a 10 Watt resistor might be rated 10 Watts/100 Amps or a 5 Watt resistor might be rated 10 Watts/5 Amps Now if you're going for a 5 Watt device that you know is rated 10 Watts/5 Amps
