I have been using Lightroom for a few years and this version is amazing. The new lens correction is much better than the previous version. I can't wait to get back into work.

Cheers

Stephenk I haven't tried the update, yet. But will update this when I get around to it. But, so far, I'm pretty impressed with Lightroom 5.4 - it's faster. And of course, I'm not a photographer, plus didn't think I'd be able to use it. I'll have to look into the updated lens corrections. Are you kidding me, I'm a guy and I'm impressed! Keep impressing me!

I still like the old version better because of the use of the black background. However, if that's not an option, then I'm a bigger fan of Lightroom. Kudos!

Peroo As a PS CC user for many years, I can't wait to get to work with this new version. I already have installed PS CC on my MacBook Pro from when it was released. Now I've installed the latest version on my Windows 7 Laptop. I am not a professional photographer, but I do shoot on my iPhone. And use Lightroom for iPhone/iPad editing and work. As I noted in my Lightroom review, Lightroom 5 has brought performance improvements. Compared to Lightroom 4 (and to LR 5.x if you are a prior Lightroom 4.3 customer), Lightroom 5 is more snappy. I do wish, once I have a better idea of what it is, that Lightroom 5 could be less dependent on the amount of RAM available. Lightroom's biggest performance issue is how memory-intensive it is when it comes to Importing/Exporting images. I can't remember how import sizes changed, but I do think that Lightroom imports are more likely to be running in RAM at some point. At the very least, Lightroom 5 imports are not memory-intensive, which means that Windows 10's memory-allocating changes are not the killer for it that they are for those of us running Windows 7 or older. I believe Lightroom 5 would have performed better on Windows 8 and Windows 8.1.
